Since it's to do with sound, I'll need vibration magic...
...I've never used it for this purpose before, but...
I know that some ancient ruins have traps that can replicate a mandragora's scream. If I had something similar, something to replicate Reszurre's voice on demand, I could probably use it to pacify beasts. It's worth giving it a try.
...And that's the gist of it.
Will you help me, Reszurre-san?
I... I'll do it...!
That sounds excit-ing...!
Well...
Let's give it a go.
Should I sing into this stone...?
No, I'll handle the recording part, so just sing normally.
TOCK...
I'll copy the sound waves of her voice and inscribe them into a mana stone, and then anyone will be able to replicate them with a bit of mana... The quality might not be great, though...

Reszurre's voice was even stronger, even richer in mana than the last time I heard it, but it felt soothing as it echoed through the room.
She didn't say any words, but I could guess from the melody that it was just a measure from a bigger song. If the wandering merchant hears this, he might have some information about Reszurre's hometown. After a few tries, I successfully recorded the song.
